Note-taking is one of my favourite pastimes. I can't tell you where I'd be if I hadn't had a pen on hand to write down my ideas (or more importantly, other people's) as soon as they came to me. Some of Virgin's most successful companies have been born from random moments, if we hadn't opened our notebooks, they would never have happened.

Despite the rise of many productivity apps and online tools, there's one method of notetaking that just won't go away and still stands the test of time. No matter how fancy the latest smartphone is, it just can't beat the classic paper notebook.

SCIENCE SAYS IT TOO! The simple act of writing everything by hand literally makes you smarter, and one study has found that by ditching the keyboard and picking up the pen you're more likely to process information instead of just copying things down verbatim. Writing longhand might seem less efficient, but it forces your brain to carefully analyse what you're thinking, and in turn, improves your memory and ability to recall that information.
